CONTENT

TITLE:

- It is difficult to identify the objective of the paper from the title of this study. Consider changing the title that best reflects the objective of the study.

ABSTRACT:

- Consider including the brief background of your study before the purpose of the study was stated.
- Be consistent: subjects or participants? Choose one.
- Add information on the duration of the treatment. Did it last for 10 weeks or 14 weeks? In data collection, it was 14 weeks, while in the context of your study, it was conducted for 10 weeks. Please be consistent.

OBJECTIVE OF THE RESEARCH PROJECT:

The objective of this paper was not clear enough. What would be the problem and how to solve it must clearly be stated in your paper. What did you investigate? What would be the impact when what you investigated was implemented? Instead of saying, “This current study aimed at evaluating English for service sectors majors’ language proficiency in utilizing BYU BNC in a form of virtual classroom,” it would be better to say, “This current study aimed at evaluating English for service sectors majors' language proficiency after utilizing BYU BNC in a virtual classroom" or "This study aimed at investigating the use of English corpus to enhance English specific purposes vocabulary acquisition of the English for service sectors majors."

LITERATURE REVIEW

Consider reviewing some previous studies that discussed same/similar topic. Explain how your study was different from those. Also, you are encouraged to present the research gap.

METHODOLOGY

The data collection and data analysis must be thoroughly explained. This current study needs to elaborate more on the procedure in data collection and data analysis. Explain the research instruments in detail. The test format and the number of the test items must be clearly stated. Also, consider explaining the purpose of the test. What was tested and what it was about are necessarily informed.

RESULTS/FINDINGS

Consider separating the findings from the data analysis.

DISCUSSION AND CONCLUSION

Consider relating the current findings to the related studies or the underlying theories.
